

PARTISAN ROW OVER THE NEW TAX BILL MAY SPLIT RANKS

Republican Leaders in Both Senate and House Leap Into Fray

DEMOCRATS OBJECT

Criticise the Measure Because It Goes Entirely Too Far

By William S. Neal
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 31.—(INS)—Congress was embroiled in a lively partisan row over the new tax bill today, with indications that the measure devised by the House Ways and Means Committee may split Democratic ranks.

Republican leaders in both Senate and House leaped into the fray with bitter denunciation of the inheritance, gift, individual income and corporation taxes.

A group of administration Democrats caustically criticized the House measure because it went beyond the so-called "share the wealth" program barred in President Roosevelt's message.

While the word battle was going on, secretary of treasury Henry Morgenthau prepared to go before the Senate finance committee to answer questions.

After President Roosevelt had conferred with Morgenthau and other administration officials, it was emphasized that Morgenthau would carry no instructions from the White House. Nor was he expected to make any recommendations on behalf of the Treasury.

Seven Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee joined in signing a minority report, marked by one of the most bitter attacks yet made upon President Roosevelt by a group of Republicans.

John S. Williams Named To High Office In Order

John S. Williams, popular first ward councilman and past exalted ruler of the Bristol Lodge of Elks, has been appointed district deputy grand exalted ruler of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, by grand exalted ruler James F. Hallihan, of New York.

This office, one of the coveted appointments in the state, has been held by only one other Bristolian in the past years. Pemberton Munster had the honor of serving in the same capacity a number of years ago.

Mr. Williams has complete authority over every lodge in his district, and is required to visit each one within the year. Members of the local lodge are proud of the honor conferred on their fellow member.

Funeral Conducted For Former Bucks Sheriff

LANGHORNE, July 31.—The Rev. J. Carpenter Zook, pastor of Downingtown M. E. Church, a former pastor at Langhorne Methodist Church, officiated at the funeral services yesterday afternoon at the Horner funeral home for the late Albert S. Paxson, former Bucks County sheriff.

Masonic services were also conducted, the deceased being a past master of Newtown Lodge, 427, F. and A. M. Burial was made in William Penn Cemetery, Somerton.

The late Mr. Paxson served as sheriff from 1905 to 1908. Previous to that time he had engaged in farming at Southampton. He had resided in this borough for the past 12 years, making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Norman Hibbs, Pine street. He was 81 years of age.

Miss Elizabeth Mariner, Washington street, and Miss Frances Schelle, Jefferson avenue, passed the week-end in Seaside, N. J., as the guests of friends.

Blimps Search for Body

Point Pleasant, N. J., July 31.—Navy blimps from the Lakehurst, N. J., air post today joined the search for the body of David Higgins, 22, Kenilwood, N. J., drowned when a heavy undertow carried him to sea. Naval aircraft were brought to the scene when life-guards failed to recover his body.

$40,000 Fire in Kansas

Kansas City, Mo., July 31.—A fire which threatened the entire Kansas City stockyards was brought under control today with damage confined to $40,000 loss. Twenty-five companies fought the blaze which was discovered at 4 a. m. Approximately 400 army horses and mules which, it was understood, were consigned for shipment to the British government, were saved. The frightened animals hindered the firemen, precipitating a scene of wild disorder until finally corralled.

Report Strange Malady

Johnstown, July 31.—Physicians today reported the strange malady with the symptoms similar to those of sleeping sickness, which has already claimed 108 victims in Windberg district, was subsiding. Dr. W. B. Fetscher, Somerset county medical director, said he believed the situation was under control and that a falling off in new victims was imminent. The first case was reported last Thursday and the number grew steadily as the malady soared from Windberg to Central City, Cairbrook, Asheole, all within 12 miles of Windberg.

G-Men Nip Extortion Plot

Salem, Mass., July 31.—Tight-lipped G-Men today nipped a plot to extort a large sum of money from Walter E. Poor, wealthy manufacturer, on a threat to kidnap one of his two sons, and arrested the four men. The names of the suspects were withheld by the Federal men, who refused to divulge the details of the plot, or the exact amount of the demanded $1,000, while another report placed the amount as high as $100,000. Poor is vice-president and chief engineer of the Hygrade Sylvania Corp., with factories here and in Pennsylvania, which manufactures radio tubes and electric light bulbs. He has two sons, George, 18, a sophomore at Harvard; and Arthur, 16, a student at a private school.

Ex-Senator Gillett Dies

In Springfield Hospital

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., July 31.—(INS)—Frederick H. Gillett, 83, former United States Senator and Speaker of the U. S. House of Representatives for six years, died today in Springfield Hospital. He had been stricken with leukemia aggravated by old age.

Gillett, a Republican, served 32 years in the House and six in the Senate. He succeeded the late Champ Clark as Speaker, which post he left to run for the Senate.

He was a native of Westfield and was graduated from Amherst College and Harvard University Law School.

ARREST FOUR YOUTHS

FOR THEFT OF WATCH

Philadelphia Men Held Under $500 Bail Each For Trial at Court

ALL DENY THEIR GUILT

Four Philadelphia youths were held in $500 bail each last night by Justice of Peace, James Guy. The quartette is charged with stealing a watch valued at $60 and $5 in cash from the pockets of Thomas M. Holmes, 5020 Tacoma street, Philadelphia.

Holmes was swimming in the Neshauney Creek, along Maple avenue, between Langhorne and Feasterville on Sunday. He drove to the spot and wore his bathing suit under his street clothes. Reaching the scene he took off his street clothes which he left in the car.

Holmes testified that he was away from the car only about 10 minutes but when he returned he found his trousers taken from beneath the front seat of the car and hanging over the back of the seat. The watch, chain and the $5 were gone.

Residents of the vicinity provided a license number of a car they noticed about the scene and the occupants of which they were suspicious. Bucks County Detective Russo arrested the four men in Philadelphia with the assistance of Philadelphia police.

The men gave their names as Guido Calderelli, Benjamin Levi, Joe Kelly and Joe Wasilski.

MARGIOTTI RULES ON COURT ELECTION CASE

Issue Becomes A Free-for-All For Party Nominations

ONE CANDIDATE EACH

HARRISBURG, July 31.—The Pennsylvania Supreme Court election contest today became a free-for-all for party nominations at the primaries which will virtually assure major party candidates election in a "dead heat" balloting in November.

Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti in a two-fold ruling decided that while two vacancies will exist on the Appellate bench, at the Fall election, each party may place only one candidate in nomination.

At the same time he formally advised Governor George H. Earle that any appointment to the vacancy caused by the death of Justice Alexander Simpson, Jr., would expire January 1st and must necessarily be filled at the forthcoming election.

Need 400 More State Police

HARRISBURG, July 31.—Crime in Pennsylvania could be reduced 50 per cent if the State Police force was augmented by about 400 more hard-riding, straight shooting troopers. The authority for this claim is Major Lynn G. Adams, veteran head of the force who explained in an interview today that his department resources are heavily taxed in detecting and apprehending criminals with the result it is unable to concentrate properly on crime prevention. The State Police force now numbers 390 men each faced with varied police work, he said.

"If it would be possible for me to keep 200 patrols (400) men on the highways at all times, I could reduce crime in Pennsylvania over 50 per cent," Major Adams asserted.

TAG DAYS ARRANGED BY LEGION CADET CORPS

To Help Defray Expenses To State Convention At Wilkes-Barre

SALES ON 26TH AND 27TH

In order that they might journey to Wilkes-Barre in August to defend their status as members of the champion Cadet bugle corps of the State of Pennsylvania, the American Legion Cadets of Robert W. Bracken Post will sponsor two tag days this week. The days set for selling of tags to secure funds are Friday and Saturday. Each and every resident of the borough is asked to support the team in the sale.

The lads are most anxious to uphold their honor as champion junior bugle and drum corps of the state, which honor they won for three consecutive years, 1932-33-34. This is the only corps to be thus honored for more than one year.

The battle this year, it is expected, will be keen, with the Bristol boys competing with 25 other corps in the state. Fifty boys and the three girls of the color guard are planning to make the trip in two buses.

Several prizes have also been won by the corps during the past year, much of the credit being due to Charles Brodie, music director, and Lieutenant commander of the corps. Mr. Brodie is not only rearranging excellent selections for the corps to play, but is also writing music for the organization. This gives the local boys a great advantage over other corps. For the state convention, when the Bristol corps will have the privilege of the two floors at Wilkes-Barre, playing for both the Legion and Auxiliary, as the champion state corps, there will be given as selections Excerpts from "Tannhauser." These numbers have been rearranged for the corps by Mr. Brodie.

Jacob C. Schmidt, Jr., commander of the corps, together with his assistants, is hoping the tag days will be highly successful, in order that the dreams of the state convention might be realized.

TREVOSE CHURCH WILL MARK 40TH ANNIVERSARY

Plan for Special Week's Program; Other Events to Augment Same

COMMITTEE VERY BUSY

TREVOSE, July 31.—Within a few weeks the Trevese Methodist Episcopal Church will mark its 40th anniversary. The date set for the anniversary program is September 29th to October 6th. In conjunction with this special week there will also be events leading up to and climaxing the anniversary.

The committee which is now arranging the anniversary program is composed of: Alfred Sichel, Mrs. Peter Martin, Benjamin Dean, Miss Isabel McGraw, Miss Olive Sichel, Mrs. Catherine Maull, Miss Jean Hare, Harry Heller, Edward N. Smith, Joseph B. Maull, Edward P. Guther, William Forepaugh, Elwood J. Rittenhouse, James Niebergall and Rev. A. B. Davidson.

In addition to this general committee each church organization: the Ladies' Aid, the Scouts, the Official Board, the Sunday School, the Choir and the Epworth League will have its separate committee to plan for that organization's particular part in the celebration.

Announce Changes In Locations of Buoys

The following notice to mariners is given out by the Superintendent of Lighthouses:

Delaware River, above Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, buoys moved July 30, 1935, to facilitate dredging operations in the vicinity of dredges:

Trenton Channel Buoy 16, moved 100 feet toward New Jersey shore from its present position.

Trenton Channel Buoy 17, moved 100 feet toward Pennsylvania shore from its present position.

Trenton Channel Buoy 18, moved 75 feet toward New Jersey shore from its present position.

Trenton Channel Buoy 19, moved 75 feet toward Pennsylvania shore from its present position.

Penn Manor Buoy 30-A, to be moved about August 1, 1935, 50 feet toward the New Jersey shore from its present position, without further notice.

Penn Manor Buoy 30-B, to be moved about August 1, 1935, 150 feet toward the New Jersey shore from its present position, without further notice.

Penn Manor Buoy 31-A, to be moved about August 1, 1935, 100 feet toward the Pennsylvania shore from its present position, without further notice.

Mud Island Buoy 16, will not be moved from its present charted position.

Beverly Buoy 17, will not be moved from its present charted position.

Eddington Buoy 18, will not be moved from its present charted position.

Burlington Island Buoy 19, will not be moved from its present charted position.

Due to continuous dredging operations between Florence, N. J., and Trenton, N. J., for about 10 months, buoys in the vicinity of dredges will be moved simultaneously with the progress of the dredging. Mariners should exercise caution in the use of floating aids when navigating in the vicinity of the dredges.

FIREMEN PAY TRIBUTE TO THEIR LATE CHIEF

Stand in Silence for Minute and Adopt Resolution at Meeting

HIS WORK SPOKEN OF

Members of Bristol Consolidated Fire Department last night paid tribute to their late chief, James L. McGee.

The quarterly meeting of the department was held, and on motion, appropriate resolution was adopted, and the members of the department stood in silence for one minute as a tribute to their chief.

The meeting was presided over by President Clifford L. Anderson, and he spoke feelingly of the work done by Chief McGee and the loss the department sustained in his death.

The following resolution was adopted:

The members of the Bristol Consolidated Fire Department desire to place on record their appreciation of the services of their late lamented chief, James L. McGee, and their deep sense of his loss.

By the death of Chief McGee, July 23, 1935, this department is deprived of the services and active interest of one who has been a faithful official of the department since its organization. He aided in the organization of the department, December 12, 1927, and much of its success is attributed to him.

To the matters that fell to his duties in the office of chief of the department, he gave that careful and earnest attention that was so characteristic of him. His sterling qualities, which endeared him to all with whom he came in contact, causes his death to be felt by the members of the Department as a personal bereavement, and they sympathize deeply with his family, to whom they offer their tenderest condolence, and earnestly invoke for them the support of higher consolation.

Resolved, That a copy of this minute be sent to the family and that it be published in the local paper.

CLIFFORD L. ANDERSON, President.

Attest: SERRILL D. DETLEFSON, Secretary.

College Summer Sessions Will Close On August 3rd

HARRISBURG, July 31.—Summer sessions at all State Teachers Colleges will have closed by August 3, according to an announcement from the Department of Public Instruction. Eight of the colleges completed the summer program on July 27 and five others finish this week. Nine of the thirty-one other colleges offering summer work will complete their programs by August 3. Most summer sessions will be closed by August 10.

Dr. Lester K. Ade, Superintendent of Public Instruction, said that about 11,000 of the more than 14,000 in attendance at summer schools of Pennsylvania colleges and universities are public school teachers. This figure is encouraging to the advancement of public school teaching in Pennsylvania, he said, and indicates that an increasing number of teachers are working for both the baccalaureate and advanced degrees.

According to latest reports, approximately 21,600 public school teachers are college graduates. They represent about 35 per cent of the entire teaching staff of the Commonwealth. Prior to 1920-21 there were only 400 college graduates employed in Pennsylvania public schools.

"NIGGER IN WOOD PILE," SAYS HEAD OF BUS COMPANY

Minot J. Hill Alleges Some Influence is Working Against Company

BUSES ARE ALL O-K

Says Vehicles Are in Perfect Condition and Regularly Inspected

(By International News Service)

PHILADELPHIA, July 31.—Minot J. Hill, Bristol, president of the Delaware River Coach Company, today charged "there's a nigger in the wood pile somewhere," in the complaint filed with the Pennsylvania Public Service Commission against his bus line.

The Bristol company was hailed before the Commission to show cause why its certificates of public convenience should not be revoked and cancelled for the "unsafe and inadequate condition" of its equipment and of the consequent danger to the public.

Commissioner F. P. Gruenberg took the case under advisement after hearing testimony in his office here. It is expected the Commission will announce its findings in a couple of weeks.

Only one witness, an inspector for the Commission, appeared against the bus line and the hearing did not bring out the name of the instigator of the action against the Delaware River Coach Company.

The bus line operates motor vehicles as common carriers for the transportation of persons between Morrisville and Yardley; and between Morrisville and the intersection of Bristol Pike and Poquessing Creek.

The inspector testified a number of defects he found with the nine vehicles operated by Hill's company. Mostly, it was reported they were of minor character, such as a defective tail light.

The Company was represented by Douglass D. Storey, a Harrisburg attorney who placed Hill on the stand as his only witness. The company official declared the buses are kept in perfect condition and that only six are ever in operation at the same time. The three buses not in use, he told the Commission are inspected and returned to service replacing other buses which are brought into the line shops for "a thorough inspection periodically."

"All the buses were inspected within the last two weeks at Bristol and were found to be in perfect condition by the State Motor Vehicle Department," Hill testified.

"The insurance company with which we have personal liability and property damage policies inspects our buses regularly and they have always approved them."

"We maintain a complete repair department and are constantly working on the vehicles to keep them in shape." Hill refused to enlarge upon his opinion concerning the "nigger in the wood pile."

After Gruenberg studies the testimony he will report his findings to the full Commission Board in Harrisburg and that body will then consider Gruenberg's opinion and will hand down a decision.

MANGANESE

Manganese ore, it appears, played a principal part in the Russo-American trade agreement. Russia, an outstanding producer of manganese, asked for a reduction of the American tariff on this ore. There was no tariff concession which she in return could make to this country because our imports are bought by a government agency. Consequently, it was arranged that in return for a halving of the American duty of 110 per cent. on manganese ore the soviet government would increase its purchases of goods in this country.

This places Russia on the same basis respecting duty on manganese as the American-Brazilian reciprocal trade agreement established for Brazil. As in the case of Brazil, the American Manganese Producers Association has protested and the government has countered with figures to show the protest unfounded. According to J. Carson Adkerson, president of the association, the reduction of duty on imports of manganese ore from Russia will throw from 5,000 to 7,000 men out of work, destroy the manganese industry and cause a loss of $2,500,000 to the government, of revenue a year. The state department's reply is that the domestic manganese industry employs only about 354 men, that the value of the industry's production in 1932 was only $442,000, and that in contrast with the domestic manganese industry is the American foreign commerce, worth $88,000,000 with manganese producing countries.

In short, the government made the same reply as it made to a like protest when the agreement with Brazil was negotiated. The contrast between the figures on employment in the domestic manganese industry—the manganese producers count their workers at from 5,000 to 10,444 and the government counts them at about 354—throws an interesting light on the manner in which tariffs are arrived at in this country.

BRADDOCK'S AMBITION

James J. Braddock, announced his intention of retaining the title as pacifically as possible for a year or so while he saved up the incidental gleanings of his office to send his sons to Yale.

His admirable ambition is in great danger of being thwarted. Boxing promoters who care not a fig whether Braddock's sons become foster sons of Old Eli, are bent on making him fight again at an early date—with the probable result that he will lose, and lose at the same time most of his earning power and leave his desired education fund incomplete.

That, alas, is the way of the world—the boxing world. Boxing promoters are quite devoid of high cultural ideals. Financing scholarships was never their purpose.

We hope that in some way or other Braddock will succeed in his design, but experience shows that his is not the best plan for sending sons to Yale. Boxers' sons, if any, are more likely to wind up in the University of Hard Knocks, where their fathers graduated—or prematurely flunked out.

The department of justice has abandoned a policy of putting prices on dead hoodlums, and Purvis has resigned. Maybe Karpis will be brought in by Frank Buck.

THE SNOW LEOPARD by Chris Hawthorne

CHAPTER XVIII

Bannister relaxed and began to unlace his boots. "She's willing to work with us, then?" he asked eagerly.

"Up to a certain point," Toole explained. "That girl is the deep purple—she'll get the stuff from Jeff's room without our help. If she fails, it's up to us to try."

"It's nearly seven now," said Dick. "If she thinks that Whipple will go down to the Rose Room for dinner, we'll be able to clear up that point soon. If she fails, what then?"

"I'll be on the job when she leaves his room. If she comes out without the goods I'll go in and comb the place down to the point."

Dick grew hopeful. "If you manage to dig up the parchments I'll find out what's keeping her away from me," he said.

Toole raised a warning hand. "I've promised to give her the stuff without reading it—to turn it over to her at once."

"And you promised that?" Dick asked wrathfully. "Now you're out of the case entirely. What are you going to do for evidence against the Whipples? Is this to be a cut-and-cover job with you the same as it is with Sire and Matt Boyle?"

"I have an ace—"

"Confound your ace!" Bannister snorted. "Lay it on the table—let me look at it right now! Am I supposed to sit in this game blindfolded?"

Toole did not answer. Patting his "absent" arm, he walked to the door, opened it a few inches and stood listening. Bannister shoved Bully back with the side of his foot and leaned over the detective. A chime of voices came from the corridor, one unmistakably that of Karen Sire, another that of the maid's.

The detective peered out a little. The voices died away and only the faint frou-frou of skirts could be heard. "She's gone down the elevator," said Toole, turning. "When Jeff leaves his room—if he does—I'm to call her up from here. Then she'll come back and make a try for the stuff. Right enough, ain't it?"

"Oh, all right, all right," Bannister growled. "But we're going to dig holes and fill 'em with dirt, so far as I can see."

Five minutes passed. At last they heard the rattle of keys, followed by the sound of a closing door. Whipple had emerged from his room. So far, Karen's scheme had worked admirably; the man had responded to the lure of a meeting with his mysterious, beautiful neighbor.

Toole went to the telephone and called. "Miss Westcott?" he asked. Bannister remembered the name; it was the one under which Karen Sire had registered.

The detective's voice was continuing: "Miss Westcott, if I were you I'd stay down there and enjoy my dinner. You can't do a thing if you come back here—our friend has taken the stuff with him."

Toole hung up the receiver and turned. "Jeff's pretty wary," he said. "When he left his room he took a black portfolio with him. Of course, the junk was in it. He'll probably put it in the hotel vault. If he does that I'll have plenty of time to take you on a bit of a hunt, Miss Sire. You can bet on one thing, Bannister, he won't get twenty feet away from the desk with that bag when he calls for it. I didn't promise to carry on with the girl that far. Down at the bottom I guess I'm a plain, honest cop, after all."

"Maybe he'll bring the bag back," said Dick. "Karen has had her trick, it's our turn now."

He was reaching again for the heavy boots when Toole kicked them into a corner. "We'll try felt slippers first," he replied. "But I don't think the little lady has played out her hand."

Toole's friend, the house detective, was not the only person who followed Mr. Geoffrey Whipple with more than a casual eye as the man moved through the gay throng in the rooms below. Karen Sire had taken a place by herself in a conspicuous table in the Rose Room and was pondering her next move. Despite Toole's disappointing message, something told her to await the house detective's signal of Whipple's approach, which her "One-Armed" friend had arranged. Presently the signal came.

Whipple presented an imposing figure. There was nothing out of the ordinary about him. He was tall and athletic, much like Bannister, but probably ten years older. A well-cut head, covered with crisp black hair, crowned his shoulders. His dark eyes were the flush of health, his face was sparkling, his smile disarming. He seemed to flow with the sensuous stream of his surroundings—the softened lights, the music, the rippling laughter of women. Toole had measured the man accurately; luxurious displays were his life; they held him in a thrall that amounted to a pleasant neurosis. To Karen he became a reality for the first time. She relaxed to meet the ordeal.

Whipple had not turned the portfolio in at the desk for safe keeping; he had checked it in the most off-hand fashion at the parcel room near the door. This Karen had seen herself. The man's smile swept the room, his eyes lingering for a brief moment on the girl with red hair. She turned her own away; she felt like a bird under the cobra's spell.

Here was a man in his element; he had that familiar, night club air about him. "Come what may, I'm for it," was written across his handsome face. The place was in a quiet state of revelry and only needed perousion. He took a table near Karen's.

Something more than beauty, something more definite than the prospects of a light flirtation, stirred Whipple as he was about to take his seat. Yes, he knew that girl—certainly he had met her—seen her—somewhere before. The place? Her name? As he racked his memory, hesitating to bow, Karen's glorious smile banished his doubts with a "Why, Whipple, don't you remember me? It's been years—"

In a flash, Jeff recalled Maurice Sire's little girl . . . she was a child indeed when he had seen her last . . . he had been her father's engineering ace . . . he wondered if she recalled that Sire and he had parted abruptly and bitterly . . .

But there was nothing in her greeting to indicate that Karen thought of Whipple as other than an old friend and associate of her father. She was in the Rose Room, she said, awaiting a girl friend. Certainly, she would enjoy dancing with Mr. Whipple. And so after cocktails and to the orchestral strains of "Anything Goes," Karen and handsome Jeff soon were in the whirl of early evening dancers. Cut-ins were the custom at these informal dansants, at half-minute intervals, it seemed, judging from the arm-tugging activities of a rather large stag line. So Karen must "work fast."

When he left the portfolio in the parcel room, Karen noted that he had dropped the check into the right hand pocket of his dinner jacket. It was there now. Why should she falter?

Whipple proved to be a master dancer; more, his restraint and courtesy in the unconventional situation were admirable. Without a murmur he yielded the girl's hand to the youth who first had broken the ice. But when he bowed, smiling back to his own table, the check for the portfolio was not in his pocket!

With the check snugly hidden in her girdle, Karen considered the next move. Suppose the attendant in the parcel room remembered that a man had left the case and that she should be questioned as to her right to retrieve it? Again, Whipple might at any moment thrust his hand into his pocket and miss the check. She waited until the tide of dancers floated him away with a new partner, then left the room and hurried to a telephone. For the moment the inhibition that she had created against Bannister's wooing melted in the quick flame of expediency; she heard herself saying into the telephone: "Mr. Richard Bannister's apartment, please!"

But it was Toole who answered. "Please ask Mr. Bannister to come down immediately," she said. A moment of silence and then Toole's voice: "He's on his way!"

Bannister had attended to the little matter of dressing a half hour earlier, against just such an emergency. Karen saw him emerge from an elevator and hurried to him. "Mr. Bannister," she said, "I must have tried your patience today, but I hope you have found some extension in the explanation I made to Mr. Toole. If you have, I am going to ask another service of you."

"Tell me what you wish me to do, Miss Sire, and it is done."

She drew the check from her girdle. "This is for Mr. Whipple's portfolio," she said. "I took it from his pocket in much the same way that I relieved you of the stiletto. If I may say it without offending you, and he are much the same in appearance, whatever gulf may exist between you in other matters, the attendant probably will give you the portfolio without question." Bannister took the check and presented it. All astonishingly easy! But the portfolio was in his possession only with a quiet "Thank you!"

"First the stiletto, now the bag," he said dazedly. "Murder and larceny! Got a match? I feel like burning down the hotel."

"Please defer that for a while," she laughed. "I'll join you again directly."

He saw her trip lightly up the stairs to the mezzanine floor and disappear. In ten minutes she returned, carrying the portfolio. "I've taken Mr. Whipple's plunder out," she explained, without a touch of excitement, "but I've replaced it with some informative folders on how to go around the world by land, sea and air."

"He'll choose the air when he thinks the parchments, don't you miss?" Bannister bantered.

"The girl handed him the bag. 'May I ask you to return it to the parcel room?' she asked. 'I'll wait for the check and put it back in his pocket.'"

"You're inviting danger," Bannister expostulated. "Let me take the documents. 'Pon my word, I won't look at 'em.'"

The house detective approached them. "Scatter!" he advised, under his breath. "Whipple has missed his pocket, was taken out of his pocket."

Karen turned and sped for an elevator. Bannister recovered his wits when he heard the detective saying: "I saw Miss Sire make the dip when she was dancing with Jeff. What did she get?"

Dick held up the bag. "She took the check for this bag," he said rapidly. "I got it out of the parcel room for her."

The house man seized the portfolio and tossed it to a passing bellhop. "Check the bag," he ordered, "and bring the check to me." He turned again to Bannister. "Do you and Whipple know each other?" he asked.

Dick shook out a negative. The bellboy returned and handed the check to the house detective. At the same instant Whipple emerged from the Rose Room. All his urbane was gone. The white teeth that had been framed in a smile were now uncovered behind snarling lips; his eyes gleamed like those of a wild animal desperately seeking some way out of a trap.

Bannister took him in with one sweeping glance. The house man pretended not to recognize him and called a boy to "page Mr. Whipple." Jeff approached the pair and introduced himself, still glowering. "I've lost a check for a bag," he said.

"This it?" asked the house man, holding up the disk. "It was found on the floor near your table."

Whipple's blandness returned instantly. "Ah, thank you!" he said, taking the check. He surveyed Bannister and the detective with a friendly eye. "House men, I suppose," he added. "I'll leave an envelope for you in the morning."

"No tips," Bannister admonished, as Jeff walked away. The two men saw him pause at the parcel room, then, apparently satisfied that the portfolio was safe, turn and re-enter the Rose Room.

"Great piece of work," Bannister said approvingly.

"Routine, routine!" replied the house man. "It may turn out to be a sloppy job. What was taken from the bag?"

"Everything—the bag is filled with travel folders."

"Well, whatever happens, Jeff isn't in a position to make a belch to the management or to the cops but he'll try to recover the stuff in his own way."

That fear already had assailed Bannister. Would Whipple discover the trick and invade Karen Sire's room? She probably was there now. "I'll keep an eye on him until he goes up-stairs," he said, walking toward the Rose Room. "He may be expecting Miss Sire to return."

From a remote corner Dick watched Whipple dancing. This fellow, he ruminated, had actually held Karen Sire in his arms. Behind this thought trailed another in which the boots figured most prominently. He felt a nudge at his elbow and turned to see the house detective dropping into a chair beside him.

"The red-haired gal has just checked out," said the man. "She took the chow with her. All you've got to do now is nothing. I'm off duty for the night, myself. I've talked with Toole and told him all about it."

Modern Freedom FOR MODERN WOMEN

Sanitary Protection without Pads, Napkins or Belts

FOR today's woman . . . busy, modern, throwing off ancient shackles . . . Bettes were created. Here is a method that ends the discomfort, the inconvenience and the embarrassment that heretofore has been an unavoidable part of this feminine problem. With Bettes there is no consciousness of wearing a sanitary protection at all! They are completely invisible in use . . . deodorant . . . and, though they safely and efficiently perform the purpose of ordinary napkins, Bettes are so tiny that a day's supply can be carried unobtrusively in a handbag. Never before have women known such comfort . . . such convenience . . . such daintiness . . . in a sanitary protection.

SUNDAY DINNER

Suggestions

By ANN PAGE

PEACHES are almost as plentiful this week as last and plums even more so. Various kinds of melons are especially choice and inexpensive. The first Bartlett pears have arrived. Lower prices are anticipated as soon as they are more abundant.

Corn and lima beans, peas and green beans, red and white cabbage, beets and carrots are all moderately priced or even cheap. Lettuce is lower and tomatoes plentiful though somewhat affected by the humid hot weather.

Lamb is the best meat buy and pork of all kinds the highest. New crop broiling chickens are choice and unusually good value.

Here are three menus made up from seasonal foods adapted to different budget levels:

Low Cost Dinner

Veal Chops Creamed Potatoes
Green Beans
Bread and Butter
Stewed Plums Cup Cakes
Tea or Coffee Milk

Medium Cost Dinner

Cold Fried Chicken Tomatoes
Peas, Green and Lima Bean Salad
Hot Rolls and Butter
Peach Roly Poly Milk
Tea or Coffee

Very Special Dinner

Melon
Roast Beef
Parsley Creamed Potatoes
Corn on the Cob
Lettuce and Cucumber Salad

Have you driven this year's Ford V-8

THERE'S nothing like a ride in a car to find out what it offers in performance, comfort, safety and all-round satisfaction. This is particularly true of the Ford V-8. Many a motorist has said—"That first ride gave me the surprise of my life. I had no idea a low-price car could be as good as that."

Our thought about the purchase of an automobile is simply this:

On the Air—FRED WARING and HIS PENNSYLVANIANS and STOOPNACLE and BUDD... Presented by Ford Dealers every Tuesday night from 9:30 to 10:30 (E. D. S. T.), all Columbia Stations.

SEE THE FORD EXHIBIT ON THE STEEL PIER AT ATLANTIC CITY. ADMISSION FREE.

There are many makes of cars, each claiming some points of superiority. Sometimes these claims may confuse you, for obviously all cars cannot be "the best" and "the fastest" and "the most economical." The surest way to decide what is what is to put the car through its paces and see what it can do. A half-hour behind the wheel will tell you more than a thousand words.

We'd like to have you do that with the Ford V-8 because we believe it will give all you desire in speed, power, safety, size and comfort, and save you considerable money in first cost and in cost of operation. The nearest Ford dealer joins in this invitation to drive the car and will be glad to place a Ford V-8 at your disposal for a demonstration.

LANGHORNE SPEEDWAY GETS FASTER EACH MEET

LANGHORNE, July 31.—Thirty-six thousand gallons of oil will have been soaked into the one mile racing course of Langhorne Speedway before the nation's stars wind up their powerful mounts in the third and final classic of the season there Sunday afternoon, August 11th.

Twelve thousand gallons were applied before each of the meets presented this season, and Ralph A. Hankinson has ordered another application of 12,000 gallons for early next week. A large ground crew has been working for a week ironing out the bumps and ruts, and a pavement-like surface will be ready for the final test.

History shows that Langhorne gets fastest with each succeeding meet, and with an unusually fine array of cars it is possible that Doc Mackenzie's track of 36 seconds, or 100 miles an hour, will be bettered.

Seventy-four thousand persons witnessed the first two meets at Langhorne Speedway this season and it is almost a certainty that a new all time season's attendance record will be recorded after the running of the third and final 100 laps of racing Sunday afternoon, August 11th.

DARKNESS STOPS CUBANS FROM WINNING

Darkness prevented the Cubans from winning their contest with the Newport Road Men's Club on the Newportville diamond. The Cubans scored six runs in the sixth to take a 10-6 lead but as darkness intervened the game was called and the score reverting back to the fifth gave the Newporters the victory, 6-4.

Six hits went to waste in the extra frame which wasn't completed. The colored boys had driven Mellor from the box and had hit Cooney freely. It was the second straight win for the Road Club.

COPS COP RABBITS

BROCKTON, Mass. — (INS) — It was a quiet day until police found themselves in the midst of a rabbit hunt. Two detectives found a lad who had stolen a pet rabbit owned by a woman resident. The chap, however, had traded the pet for two pigeons. The pigeon salesman traded the rabbit for a radio. They eventually caught up with the holder of the bunny but found a blessed event had taken place and instead of carting back the rabbit, the detectives had 13.

MOORE'S HOME RUN WINS FOR THE CASEYS

Paul Moore's home run in the sixth with two runners on the sacks gave the Caseys their fifth straight win of the second half of the Bristol Twilight League last night as the Jefferson A. C. again dropped to the cellar of the circuit. Final score of the contest was 8-6.

Poor base-running accounted for the Jeffersonians not winning the contest in their last turn with the stick. J. Tullio opened here with a single and B. Tullio followed with a double. But J. Tullio was caught napping off third and B. Tullio was caught off second in a double play. Two hits followed and then Ray Tomlinson blasted a triple to right to score two runs.

Ralph Stromp was the winning pitcher, fanning ten batters, seven of these came in consecutive order. Ralph Narcisi was the losing hurler.

COMLY AND BILGER FEATURE IN GAME

In a game featured by the base-running of Leon Comly and Warren Bilger, the Hulmeville A. A. nine continued to lead the pack in the second half race of the Lower Bucks County League, trimming the Odd Fellows, 8-1, on the Hulmeville field.

Bilger made two safe hits and scored three runs in the tilt while Comly was credited with two stolen bases at opportune moments of the fray. The Odds were held to four hits by the combined hurling of Ike Watson and Wils Holland. It was the seventh consecutive win for the Blackmen who haven't been beaten since the Hibernians trimmed them, 3-2, in the opening game of the second half.

UMPIRE GIVES GAME TO EDGELY BRVES NINE

Accusing the Bristol A. A. team of stalling in order to have the game called because of darkness, Umpire-in-chief Harry Johnson gave the Edgely Braves a 9-0 forfeit over the A. A. last night on the Edgely diamond. At the time of Johnson's decision the score was deadlocked, 3-3.

The Braves were beaten, 3-1, at the closing of the seventh. L. Prall was passed and scored on a double by Hines. Wright tripled, scoring Hines. Mahnsbury was given four bad balls. L. Hibbs received two bad pitches and then stopped over the plate in order to sacrifice Wright to the plate. The ball was too bad and so Hibbs let the pitch go by. An argument followed, the A. A. players claiming Hibbs was out for stepping over the plate. As darkness was coming over the field and the A's continued to argue, Umpire Johnson made his decision.

Proving That Size Is Not Everything

By BURNLEY

This is beginning to look like a great year for little men, by which I mean comparatively small athletes who are considerably handicapped in the way of size and weight against larger competitors or opponents.

In the three most important ring battles of the year so far, the smaller gladiator has come through to victory on each occasion.

First, Barney Ross, weighing only a few pounds over the lightweight limit, took the welterweight crown back from a full-fledged 147-pounder, Jimmy McLarin. Then James J. Braddock spotted Max Baer more than 20 pounds in weight and several inches in height only to hand the deflated Livermore Loup-speaker a sound thumping. Finally came the best job of giant-killing seen in years—the Louis-Camara shambles, in which the 190-pound Negro dynamiter literally slaughtered the 260-pound Goliath from Italy.

The fight game was not the only sport to see smaller men score notable victories, however. Jack Lovelock, slim little New Zealander from Oxford, who tips the scales at the lightweight mark of some 133 pounds, scored decisively over his two bulky rivals, the barrel-chested Cunningham and the impressively muscled Bonthron.

Baseball puts forward Tommy Bridges, 140-pound mound magician of the Tigers, and Jo-Jo Moore, emaciated Giant outfielder, as leading members of the "Small Men Who Made Good" brigade.

And America's Davis Cup hopes, such as they are this year, rest largely on the frail shoulders of best Sidney Wood, blond stylist of the racquet who is capable of beating the best in the tennis world when on his game.
